A BACHELOR'S MISFORTUNE

Dear Mr. Editor:-I am obliged to tell you that you have played -the devil-I was going to say something stronger. For Heaven sake keep all this leap-year proposals from these heart-sick maidens list. out of your colums. Let me recite my tale of woe. I went to a pasty last night and some girl, young lady, or old maid; I don't know which, inveigled me into a remote corner of the house. I was sorter surprised at her antics. I believe she tried to kiss me. Now I am ter a little while I thought your misterious trunk exploded, fot she atives at Lancaster. broke forth in a passionate appeal of "Honey, Sweetheart, Darling," and every other affectionate name, Won't you, won't you! Ah, please the word?" To say I was nonplussed would be to almost lic. I asked her it I should g t the doctor or her father, the dentist, or what she wanted any way She continued her appeals? sobbing and crying, ond atlast it became apparent to my mind that she-must I say it-proposed. Oh, Mr, Editor! What did I do to be compelled to go throug all this? Ali I could say was, "this is so sudden." I am so overcome with emotion that I can

The announcement has raised a suggestion whether coal firing will not be altogether abolished in the three latest additions to the King Edward VII. class in the navy. A Brit-ish construction official gave it as his ontnion that oil fuel would long remain as merely supplementary to coal firing in warships. He admitted that the method of employing it would soon be developed to a stage at which it would prove quite as effective a means of generating motive power as coal, this notwithstand ing that coal bunkers are not likely to become a thing of the past in warships for a long time to come. One point which in the expert's view seriously militates sgainst a general adoption of oil as fuel for warship purposes is the dangerously inflammable quality. An example of this was cried by a construction official some time ago. When the German battleship Kaise Wilhelm II. was carrying out steaming trials it touched a rock with sufficient force to perforate its bilge plating amid ships. An inrush of water followed, and oil stored in the fuel tanks came floating to the surface. "CLEAN MONEY" LEGISLATION

President of New York Health Board Tells National Legislators of Germ-Killing Process.

Daily cleansing of money as a santary precaution is a possibility in this A system of official sterilizaon of the supplies of money passin arough the great arteries of trade in he big elties is the plan proposed. New York is the pioneer in the movement. Dr. Thomas Darlington president of the board of health of hat city, told of his investigations and outlined his plans when he apeared before the committee on bankng and currency of the house of renesentatives recently. Pending legisation for "clean money" was heartly endorsed by him, and he gave valuable suggestions as to end the disease germs in currency can be stamped out. Experiments now under way by Dr. Park, of the New York bacteriological laboratory, tend to confirm the belief entertained by the medical profession "He didn't have time," sighed that old bills are active mediums in the transmission of disease germs should the experiments, Dr. Darlingcirculation in that cliv is loaded with daily sterilization will be put into of-

THE LESSON TEXT.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He maketh the storm a caim, so that the waves thereof are still.—Ps. 107:29. OUTLINE OF SCRIPTURE SECTION. Healing Blind and Dumb Man, Matt. 12:22-3

Matt. S:23-27. Mark 4:35-41. TIME.—The fall of A. D. 29 (part of "The fear of Public Favor"). PLACE.—The sea of Galilee.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

(Mark 4:35, 36.) "On that day:" A scribed in the first part of this chapter. It was the day on which He had spoken the parables of the sower, the lamp, the wheat and the tares, the leaven and other parables of the nature of the kingdom and how it should was at the close of a long, hard day, Jesus was too sensitive, tender-heart-ed and sympathetic to reach the close of such a day without being thoroughly tired; there was the speaking to the crowd-not altogether sympatheticand the listening to the stories of the poor and friendless who always thronged to Him, the healing of many who were sick and the constant sigh of degradation, sin and suffering. His was not an easy one, even at the height of His popularity. "Let us go over unto the other side:" To get away from the crowds; when He was with them He could not rest and His hu-man endurance had been taxed to the utmost. He must have rest and quie and time to think and pray is order to be ready for another day of serv

The Sea of Galilee lay at the bottom of a very deep valley, 680 feet below the level of the Mediterranean sea. rugged hills that rise abruptly on both sides of the little lake are broken by huge gorges through which the wind sweeps down in whirls and eddies upon the water. The tropical heat of the valley partly accounts for the suddenness and fury of these storms. "The waves beat into the boat:" It is harder for a boat to live in a sea of choppy, white-capped waves, on a little lake, than on the mountainous swells of the the boat was well handled, for many of the disciples were professional fish-ermen, and knew every inch of the lake from years of life upon it, but the loaded and could not afford to ship much water. "In the stern, asleep on the cushion:" Mark does not say "on a cushion" but "on the cushion;" he is naming a part of the ship-perhap the small deck across the stern of which the steersman sat, but certainly no soft pillow. That Jesus could sleep in such a place and under such circumstances shows how utterly weary He must have been. dollars in this security, but as it was nearing the end of the week and his finances were at a low ebb he proposed to make up a pool of eight among his fellow employes, which would bring his and their interests to the modes amount of 25 cents each, which seemed less like plunging. Scundling shook his head at first when Plimson made the proposal, but when it appeared that his 25 cents was absolutely needed to make up the pool he handed over the coin with the remark that a fool and his money were soon parted.
"Oh, I don't know," said Plimson.

That ticket may rake off the capital prize and that wouldn't seem so foolish. Two hundred thousand dollars isn't found growing on every bush."
"You're mistaken," said Scundling.

"The bushes are full of 'em. There's millions all around us inviting us to gather 'em in-only they've got a little string to 'em. I don't expect to get that quarter back, but I guess I can afford to lose it."

"Make a note of the number, anyway," said Plimson. "I may try to switch it on you. If that isn't a lucky one there's no virtue in nines—four of 'em, d'you see? Nine to begin with and then eight and one, nine; seven and two, nine, and five and four, nine. See ?--9817254."

"Nine million chances to four that you lose," said Scundling.

The drawing was to be three weeks later and Soundling promptly forgot all He had plenty of things to think of, the chief in importance being Mabel. Matters were not going well there. Mabel herself was as sweet as ever and gave him no uneasiness, but Mabel's father was getting worse and worse. He had never thought favorably of Scundling as a suitor for his daughter's hand, maintaining that the young man was what he termed a stick-in-the-mud. "I don't hold it out against him that he's poor, he said. "I was poor myself once-poorer than Job's turkey—but I wasn't satisfied to plug along that way and that chap seems to be. He may be saving, but he's holding down the same job at the same wages he was three years ago, when he first came might do me good." oning around. That doesn't look
